

I urge you to strengthen rules governing localism in broadcasting. Both radio and television broadcasts are increasingly national in content (and they do a poor job of even that in most cases), leaving localities to find information and services pertinent and critical to them through other means. The airwaves are owned by the public, and the public should be served. These nationally oriented broadcasts do not serve the public in a meaningful way.